Replacing DHS Secretary Won't Stop the Invasion

By John Friend

On Feb. 13, House Republicans voted to impeach the disgraced and discredited Department of Homeland Security (DHS) Secretary Alejandro Mayorkas, one of the primary architects and enablers of the ongoing border crisis and migrant invasion of the U.S. that has rapidly spiraled out of control since President Joe Biden entered the White House.

A previous attempt to impeach Mayorkas failed in early February, primarily because Republican House Majority Leader Steve Scalise of Louisiana was away from Congress while receiving cancer treatment.

Only three GOP representatives voted “no” in the successful impeachment resolution—Rep. Ken Buck (Colo.), Rep. Mike Gallagher (Wisc.), and Rep. Tom McClintock (Calif.)—while 214 other GOP House members voted “yes.”

Buck, Gallagher, and McClintock also voted against the previous unsuccessful House attempt to impeach Mayorkas. They echoed arguments made by Biden and other Democrats that the impeachment attempt marks a politicization of the entire impeachment process and that a cabinet official should not be impeached due to disagreements with policy, ignoring the fact that Democrats have long politicized impeachment efforts against former President Donald Trump and Mayorkas’s DHS has openly refused to enforce existing immigration law.

House Democrats voted “no” in unison, yet Republicans were able to overcome the three dissenting “no” votes in their party and H. Res. 863 was successfully passed, 214-213.

“Proud of our Republican conference for working together to stand with the American people to hold Secretary Mayorkas accountable for his blatant violation of our border laws,” Rep. Marjorie Taylor Greene (R-Ga.), one of the leading proponents of im-peaching Mayorkas and a major critic of the Biden administration’s open borders policies, proclaimed on social media shortly after the vote.

House Homeland Security Committee Chair Mark Green (R-Tenn.) said that GOP House members have much more work to do before arguing that Mayorkas’s DHS “has sparked the worst border crisis in American history.”

“It’s long past time for him to be impeached,” Green stated.

The text of the resolution argues that Mayorkas must be impeached due to his “willful and systemic refusal to comply with the law” and “breach of public trust.” Mayorkas has laughably maintained that the U.S. border is in fact secure under his watch and that the migrant crisis has been manufactured, overhyped, and politicized by Republicans for partisan gain, seemingly oblivious to the facts and reality on the ground at the border and across the country.

“Throughout his tenure as secretary of Homeland Security, Mayorkas has repeatedly violated laws enacted by Congress regarding immigration and border security,” the resolution states. “In large part because of his unlawful conduct, millions of aliens have illegally entered the U.S. on an annual basis with many unlawfully remaining” in the country.

The DHS under Mayorkas has systematically refused to comply with the law, which has “significantly contributed to unprecedented levels of illegal entrants, the increased control of the Southwest border by drug cartels, and the imposition of enormous costs on states and localities affected by the influx of aliens,” the resolution powerfully argues.

For his part, Biden described the resolution as a “political stunt” and
